David Bryan Law Office
Centreville
Private

circa 1850s-1865

This small, brick double office may be the oldest surviving building on Lawyers Row. It has served as an office for a number of prominent Centreville attorneys, including John M. Robinson, who practiced law in Centreville in the late 1840's and 1850's and served as Judge of the Third Judicial Circuit 1864-67 before his election to the Court of Appeals in 1867.

The title for this lot can be traced back to 1865, when Samuel McCosh sold the property to Judge Robinson for $575. That deed describes the lot as being 1/6 of an acre, "part of said lot being now improved by two brick offices, one occupied by John M. Robinson and the other by Gibson and Feddeman.

Judge Robinson died in 1896, leaving all of his property to his wife Marianna Emory Robinson. In 1914 Marianna sold the lot "improved by a brick building now occupied by the said James T. Bright and Madison Brown" to Bright and Brown for $2000. In 1923 James Bright sold his half interest in the building and it was not until 1969 that the two offices were reunited under one owner.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Bryan Law Office is located on the south side of Lawyers Row in Centreville, facing Court House Square.

This small, one story brick building is a continuation of the Harper Building, a two story brick structure immediately to the east. The relationship between these two buildings is not clear, but it seems likely that the second story of the Harper Building was added at a later date.

The Bryan Law Office was at one time a double office, with single doors in the east and west bays flanking a pair of large 2/1 windows in the center. The present owner put a door through the center partition wall, however, and opened the two small offices up into a single large office. The two doors are set off by large single transoms, and a single band of trim crosses the facade immediately above the first floor openings. Simple molded trim frames the two center windows and stops against the horizontal band of trim. Above this, there are two square recessed panels in the brickwork directly below a projecting brick frieze with a corbeled dentil course. The recessed panels are not symmetrical to the facade, but may have been carried on across the Harper Building at one time.

On the rear facade, there is a door in the east bay and two 6/6 windows to the left. A small frame outshut covers the west bay. The brickwork has been reworked around the two windows, so these may be modern openings. A simple corbeled cornice is carried across the rear facade.

The east wall of the building is incorporated into the Harper Building; the west wall is covered by a three story brick structure dating to the late 19th century.

The interior has been completely renovated.
